A new report, 'Who Pays for Progress?' will be launched at this side-event of the Financing for Development Conference in Addis Ababa. 'Who pays for progress?' is a case study about health financing in Kenya. It explores the potential of Domestic Resource Mobilisation in the funding of the health system and the balance between DRM and ODA in the move towards Universal Health Coverage. Although a case study about Kenya, it is equally applicable to many developing countries that are also in the process of making the transition to middle-income status.
